The Consumer Price Index (CPI) for September 2025 reflects a moderate upward movement across rural, urban, and combined sectors compared to August 2025. Although all three sectors registered month-to-month inflation, the pace of price increase remains contained, indicating limited and sector-specific price pressures rather than broad-based inflationary trends.

The group-wise CPI data for September 2025 indicates mixed price trends. Some groups reported declines, particularly in food-related categories, while others—most notably the Miscellaneous group—showed notable increases.

3.1 Food and Beverages

- Declines were observed across all sectors:
  - Rural: –2.16
  - Urban: –1.65
  - Combined: –2.01

- This softening suggests improved supply conditions, seasonal arrivals, or easing pressures on essential commodities.
- Given the heavy weight of food in CPI, the decline helped moderate the overall inflation rate.

3.2 Pan, Tobacco and Intoxicants

- Marginal declines in both rural and urban indices.
- Price stability indicates limited changes in taxation or supply factors.

3.3 Clothing and Footwear

- Mild increases across rural, urban, and combined sectors.
- The uptick is likely driven by seasonal adjustments or minor upward revisions in apparel and footwear prices.

3.4 Housing

- The Housing index increased by 0.50 points.
- As it affects only urban and combined indices, its contribution remains localized but still adds to overall inflationary movement in these sectors.

3.5 Fuel and Light

- Marginal declines across all sectors.
- Reflects stable fuel prices or reduced energy consumption during the period.

3.6 Miscellaneous

A significant upward movement was recorded:

- Rural: +4.72
- Urban: +2.32
- Combined: +3.97

This category includes transport, communication, personal care (Gold,silver,Other ornaments, Barber, Beautician etc), education, health, and other services.

4. Summary and Interpretation

Despite a notable decline in the Food and Beverages group, overall CPI for September 2025 registered moderate growth across all sectors. The rise was largely driven by increases in the Miscellaneous group, overshadowing the downward pressure from food prices.

- Rural CPI saw the highest month-on-month increase, reflecting relatively stronger non-food inflationary pressures.

- Urban CPI recorded the lowest increase, with softer price movements across major groups other than housing and services.
- Combined CPI rose moderately, consistent with sector-specific factors rather than broad-based inflation.

5. Conclusion

The CPI data for September 2025 indicates mild but positive inflation, primarily fueled by service-sector price increases under the Miscellaneous group. The decline in food prices helped limit the overall inflationary impact, highlighting a balanced yet cautious inflation environment. Continued monitoring of service-related and housing costs will be crucial in assessing inflation momentum in the coming months.
